The following restrictions apply only to copies of articles, chapters, and packets left on Reserve behind the circulation desk and posted on Electronic Reserve. They do not apply to library- or instructor-owned books put on Reserve in their entirety for use in the library.

Non Copyright protected materials
You may place any materials not protected by copyright on both traditional paper and Electronic Reserves. These materials would include worksheets, notes, and tests you generated for the class yourself, as well as materials in the public domain.*

Fair Use
Although copyright laws are structured to protect the rights of the copyright owner, the Copyright Act of 1976 also contains a Fair-Use provision, which is designed to allow use of copyrighted materials for scholarly, critical, reporting, and other purposes. Four criteria must be considered to determine if a work can be used without permission:

1. Purpose of use—Is the material going to be used for a non-commercial purpose?
2. Nature of the work—Is the work published and fact based? Works of fiction, and other creative works such as music or visual art are usually excluded from fair use.
3. Amount of the work used—Is the portion of the work used a relatively small portion of the complete work, both in terms of volume and content?
4. Effect of the use—Will the use of the material have a great effect on the market for the complete work?

Interpretation of Fair Use
What do these four factors mean when it comes to Course Reserve? Generally speaking, the library will accept small portions of a copyrighted work (one article from a journal issue or one chapter from a book) for one semester without permission from the publisher. This does not include works of fiction, or other creative works, or works in which the chosen chapter or article comprises a major portion of the content of the book or journal. In these situations permission from the publisher must be obtained. This is only a guideline. The library may require publisher permission for any materials deemed to be questionable under fair use guidelines.

Obtaining Permission: When and how?
If the material Reserve material falls into any of the following categories, permission to use the material must be obtained from the publisher:
Form letters requesting permission for use are available from the Circulation Department. These letters are also available as Word files on ERes at http://breserves.liu.edu/coursepage.asp?cid=4&page=01. Blank fields may be filled in by hand or in Word before the form is mailed to the publisher of the work. The Circulation Department will require that the signed form at the bottom of the letter be submitted with the materials, and kept on file. In some circumstances, the publisher will only allow a work to be used for a fee. This may either be a flat fee, or a fee per use. It is highly recommended that requests for permission to the publisher be submitted well before you would like the material to appear on Reserve. Publishers are often slow to respond, and multiple requests may be necessary.

It is the responsibility of each instructor to obtain permission for any reserve materials not permissible under fair use guidelines, and to make arrangements for the payment of any fees imposed by the publisher.

Resources on Copyright

There are many excellent resources dealing with Copyright and education available online. Links to many of them are available on the ERes site at http://breserves.liu.edu/coursepage.asp?cid=3&page=01.

*Public Domain

When a work is in the public domain, its copyright is no longer owned by anyone. These works may be used for Course Reserve without maintaining permission. These works still must be properly credited to the original author(s).

All works published before 1923 are currently in the public domain. Works published from 1923-1977 are protected from 28 to 95 years, depending on whether or not the original copyright was renewed. Works published after 1978 are protected for the lifetime of the author plus 70 years. This is just a brief summary of copyright term. For more detailed information you may look at http://www.unc.edu/~unc الجزائ/public-d.htm. If you are uncertain about whether or not a work is in the public domain, please contact the Circulation department or a Reference librarian.
